Calling all retirees!! Or should I say, calling all coworkers of retirees. It's that time of year where we are preparing for the May awards meeting, and I need to start assembling a list of AGA members that retired during the year. I'm fearful I'll miss someone, so this is my plea to each of you to please send me an email if you are a retiree or know any AGA members who retired during the year. Help!!!!

Last month we spent time at our business meeting talking about Tennessee Open Records and Open Meetings Acts. I thank Ann Butterworth for educating us on what our responsibilities are and for giving us guidance for what the expectations are when we respond to open records requests.

Transparency in government is certainly a key concern these days. From the local governments all the way up to the federal government with the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) transparency and accountability requirements. As I mentioned last month, the Act certainly does call for more transparency than has been required in the past. And the State of Tennessee is indeed responding to this new level of responsibility swiftly.

Our own Mike Morrow has been appointed "Special Assistant to the Governor for Recovery Act Administration." The Office of Tennessee Recovery Act Management has been formed, and he will supervise the staff and serve as a liaison with the state agencies receiving Recovery Act Funds. Congratulations to Mr. Morrow!

The administration is also responding by setting up a website to post details of state spending online. Several other states had started to do this prior to the ARRA, and several more are adding the information to address the ARRA requirements. Perhaps this will start a trend with state and local governments where citizens can (in a searchable, user-friendly way) see all government spending in real-time. Talk about transparency! As a citizen and accountability professional, I see this as a positive trend.

LAST CALL for the Regional Professional Development Conference! The conference is right around the corner (April 2 and 3), so if you haven't signed up yet, do it now!! And those of you not going, make sure you notice the date change for the regular business meeting. Due to the conference, our next meeting will be April 9th. I'll see you there!

Kathy

Attention! Attention!

Gerry's going to chair a national committee next year!

Gerry Boaz has been asked to chair the Professional Certification Board, beginning July 1, 2010, or sooner.

The Professional Certification Board oversees AGA's CGFM program. Through AGA's Office of Professional Certification, the Board carries out all aspects of the CGFM program. This includes (1) establishing, maintaining and interpreting the certification program's qualification standards, (2) approving or rejecting of applications, (3) issuing CPE requirements and guidance and (4) devising CGFM examination policies and procedures.

Congratulations Gerry!!!!

Chapter Luncheons

April Luncheon Speaker

Gene Policinski, vice president and executive director of the First Amendment Center, is a veteran journalist whose career has included work in newspapers, radio, television and online operations.

Polinciski oversees operations and programs of the center, which has offices in Nashville, at Vanderbilt University; and in Washington D.C. He also is co-author of the weekly syndicated newspaper column, "Inside the First Amendment," and executive producer/host of the touring multimedia stage production, "Freedom Sings."

Policinski came to the Freedom forum in 1996 from USA TODAY, where he was a founding editor and held various news executive positions. He began his journalism career in 1969 in Indiana, where he worked as a newspaper reporter and later as state bureau chief for Gannett News Service. In 1980, he became a correspondent in the GNS Washington bureau, reporting on Congress, politics and other issues.

In 1982, he was named Washington editor of USA TODAY during its development period, and he held that post when it launched on Sept. 15. In 1983, he was named a Page One editor. In 1985, he was named deputy managing editor/sports and later was named managing editor/sports. He is the founding editor of USA TODAY Baseball Weekly (now Sports Weekly). From 1991 through 1993, he was the on-air host of three news, sports and information programs on USA Today Sky Radio. He also helped develop USA TODAY's first online ventures.

In April 1996, he joined the Freedom Forum as a journalist in residence, directing a special Olympic Games program, and in September was named special assistant to the chairman and chief executive officer. Since joining the foundation, he has held a number of executive roles, and was Washington editor for the First Amendment Center's Web site in 1999. Also, he was host and writer for of "Newseum Radio" a one-hour program that aired on National Public Radio Worldwide from 1997 to 2001. And he was executive producer of "Speaking Freely," a weekly interview program, which aired nationwide on public television from 2001 to 2005.

Interviewing: The Power of Two

By Sefton Boyars, CGFM, CPA

Many songs and sayings use the word “two”: Two for Tea, IT Takes Two to Tango, two’s company, and two heads are better than one. That last saying also applies to conducting interviews.

Often, auditors conduct interviews without a partner. This requires a great deal of multi-tasking. The auditor must ask questions, record answers, repeat questions when receiving inadequate responses, follow-up on indications of problems, and be alert to inappropriate body language. While this is going on, the auditor should indicate that she is paying close attention to what the person is saying (I will assume the auditor is a woman for writing ease). Unfortunately, in practice, the interviewer spends much of the time looking at her notebook recording responses.

When you are looking down at a pad of paper, concentrating on recording what was said, you may find it difficult to consider the content of the answers and to think of unplanned questions. In addition, you may find it almost impossible to be aware of body language. For that reason, I recommend that if possible you have a second person at all interviews. The second person provides a number of advantages.

Accurately recording responses. The auditor who writes down the answers while also conducting the interview may abbreviate the response. If we don’t say anything for 30 seconds while we record what was said, we feel guilty (perhaps justifiably) about wasting the person’s time. As a result, we sometimes shortcut our notes, believing that we will expand them later. But later, we may not recall those points we did not write down.

Following up on inadequate answers. Occasionally, a person doesn’t answer the question asked, but manages to disguise the evasion. People rarely state that they won’t answer a question; they usually just talk around it. The auditor must be alert to word choices and recognize the failure to answer questions.

Of course, if people want to avoid a question, the auditor should be thinking of asking other questions to properly explore the subject. Again, unless the auditor is listening carefully to the response, she may miss the fact that the person did not answer the question being asked.

Pursuing possible leads. When responding to questions during interviews, people sometimes mention something that warrants further follow-up. However, that something may not be highlighted during the discussion; it may just be noted casually. As a result, if the interviewer is not paying careful attention, she may not notice it. Again, when the auditor is concentrating on recording answers accurately, she may miss the comment.

Watching for body language. When the main interviewer can focus directly on the speaker, she notices hesitations, changes in speaking style, facial expressions, etc. Imagine the question: “How is morale in this organization?” Then imagine the response: “just fine.” Would you perceive that response differently if it were delivered with a nod and a smile, versus a grimace and a rolling of the eyes? If you are looking at your notes when you heard the response, you may have no idea of any nonverbal communication.

Interviewing: The Power of Two Continued

Having a second set of eyes and ears. Even if the second person has the responsibility of taking notes, the auditor still hears and sees. Your colleague may very well notice something you missed, or connect the information with some other data with which you are not as familiar. Of course, the second person can also verify what was said in the event of a dispute.

In summary, I recommend that you always try to secure the services of another auditor when you conduct an interview. That second person frees you to concentrate on the real job at hand, asking questions and considering the answers. Even if you are conducting a one-person audit, try to borrow someone to go on interviews with you. You can always promise to repay the favor in the future. I think you will find that the power of two in interviews rewards you far more than the additional costs involved.

NEWS FROM NATIONAL

AGA Education News

The Future of Government Auditing – What Direction(s) Are We Heading? April 8 Audio Conference, 2:00-3:50 PM EDT

AGA, in conjunction with the National Association of State Auditors, Comptrollers and Treasurers (NASACT) and the Association of Local Government Auditors (ALGA) is pleased to announce a new and increasingly important topic to our audio conference schedule- the future of government auditing.

Auditing has evolved over the years with many different types of audits being developed – financial, performance, follow-up, managerial, operational, etc. Some believe auditors have become too cozy with the auditees and have sacrificed their independence for cooperation and expediency, while others view auditing from a “gotcha” mentality whereby it is the role of the auditor to find as many things wrong as necessary and catch the bad guys.

Listen as a group of experienced, audit executives from each level of government address specific questions regarding the direction auditing is taking and what the audit industry must do to maintain its credibility. Learn the differences – and similarities – in the perspectives these experts bring to the table.

To share their practical experiences in auditing and views towards the future of government auditing are Jeanette M. Franzel, CGFM, CPA, Director of Financial Management and Assurance, U.S. Government Accountability Office; David R. Hancox, CGFM, CIA, Audit Director, Office of the State Comptroller, State of New York; and Drummond Kahn, CGFM, CIA, Director of Audit Services, City of Portland, Oregon.

Please join us for two hours of lively discussion about this important and timely topic. In addition to the speakers' commentary, there will be approximately 20 minutes for Q & A so that the participants can ask the speaker questions and share their own experiences

Date: Wednesday, April 8, 2009

Time: 2 –3:50 p.m. Eastern Daylight Time

Learning Objectives: To learn how auditing has evolved and which direction(s) it's heading

Prerequisite: Some familiarity with auditing

Advance Prep: None required

CPE: Two credit hours

Field of Study: Auditing

Cost: $249 per site (Unlimited Attendance) if you register on or before Friday April 3, 2009 and $299 thereafter. SPECIAL PROMOTION: Government agencies and CPAG members who register five or more office will receive a 20 percent discount ($200 per site)

To Register: 1) Register online 2) Print the registration form or the Special Promotion Registration and fax it to 703.684.6933

This audit conference offers important information to almost everyone in the accountability profession. Please share this program announcement with others in your government, chapters, educational institutions and private firms. Remember, there is no limit to attendance per phone site. IF you have any questions regarding registration, please contact Maria Lucas at 800.AGA.7211, ext. 308. Questions regarding the program should be directed to Raymond Harris, CGFM, ext. 339.
