President's Message

Ah, fall. The air is getting cool and crisp, leaves are turning red and orange and dropping from the trees and bushes. Football is on every day of the week, it seems. Hockey and basketball are on the horizon. Who doesn't love fall? But, that's not what I'm here to talk about.

I thought for the October luncheon we had a great program. The room was packed and Dr. Glenda Glover, President of TSU, gave a great speech. I would like to comment on some of Dr. Glover's remarks.

"Leadership is about action." I frequently harken back to my military days when I think of the great leaders I have been associated with. They were always men and women of action. They were not reticent to jump into a situation, take charge and get the job done.

"Bring people together and listen to all sides." Any leader who does not allow all sides to have their say is risking getting only part of the information needed to make a wise, well thought out decision. Besides that, giving everyone an opportunity to say their piece gives each one a sense of knowing their ideas have been heard and count for something. Not allowing each idea to be heard is a sure way to stifle innovation.

"Doing things right vs. doing the right things." Many of us have heard this quote from Peter Drucker (who may have gotten it from Warren G. Bennis) before. He was pointing out that management is about doing things right. Following procedures and processes, crossing all the T's and dotting all the I's. Whereas, some think that for Leadership to be effective the leader must do the right things. Both concepts are valid and have their place in the work environment. Makes for interesting reading also.

"If you do a good job you will get noticed." We all know we should not do a good job just to get noticed. Getting recognition should be a natural outflow of doing a good job. As leaders we have to be aware of when someone is doing a good job and ensure they get noticed. After the luncheon on October 14th, I saw an email sent by our own Melvin Jones, Jr., to the manager of the Doubletree Hotel commending the wait staff who served us that day for the way they performed their jobs. That is an example of a leader taking the initiative to point out someone who did a good job.

I could go on and on reciting some of the quotes from Dr. Glover's presentation, but I hope you get the message. Being a leader involves many, many things. Dr. Glover didn't get to where she is by not following these ideas. She has made them a part of her life and we should too.

AGA calls itself the 'Thought Leader' for government accountability. To be the thought leaders we must take a leadership role in our own organizations to keep the accountability concept going every day. What are you doing to stand out as a thought leader for accountability in your organization?

Rusty

Why Become a CGFM? — by Ronald H. Queen, MA, CGFM, CPA

Southeast Regional Certification Coordinator

Why should you achieve the distinction of being a Certified Government Financial Manager? Accounting and financial management are unique among professions because you can obtain a position and maintain an entire career without acquiring a professional certification. Government financial management is particularly prone toward this peculiar arrangement. Looking at the careers of the most successful practitioners of government financial management, one would note that most have achieved some type of professional certification.

If certifications were not required, why would so many of the most successful practitioners obtain one? I think the answer is simple: they desire to be the best. Obtaining a professional certification shows the world that you are striving to achieve the highest level of professionalism and competence. This desire shines through in all their career endeavors. Certification is one way they clearly exhibit their worth to their peers and their employers.

Public accounting has the CPA, the Institute of Management Accountants has the Certified Management Accountant and the Institute of Internal Auditors has the CIA; but, what about government financial managers and their unique industry? The Association of Government Accountants developed the Certified Government Financial Manager to meet the unique needs of government finance professionals and their employers.

Why be a CGFM? The answer is that you want to show that you have the knowledge and skills to keep pace with today's constantly changing financial management environment. Standing out from one's peers by achieving the status of a CGFM holder should be a career boost when promotion time comes or when seeking a different position.

Many public accounting firms practicing in the area of government accounting now require practitioners to hold the CGFM even over the CPA, requiring passage of the exam within two years of employment. The federal government shows preference to CGFM holders in promotion and hiring. Several states, including Tennessee, recognize the CGFM certification. Why do these organizations support the CGFM? They want to achieve better performance in government financial management.

How does the CGFM exhibit the achievement of the highest level of professionalism and competence for government finance professionals? A CGFM candidate must successfully pass three examinations, possess two years of government finance experience, agree to adhere to the AGA Code of Ethics and have a bachelor's or higher degree meeting certain requirements to achieve certification. Successfully passing the three exams to achieve the CGFM displays the wide range of knowledge and skills needed by government finance professionals to meet the unique challenges of state and local government finance or to succeed in the federal government financial environment.

Above all, achieving the CGFM indicates a commitment of professionalism and competence in the calling of government financial management.

This commitment to possess current knowledge and skills to meet the challenge of the constantly changing financial management environment continues through a CGFM's completing at least 80 hours of continuing professional education (CPE) every two years in government financial management topics or related technical subjects. During the first year of his/her CPE cycle, a CGFM must earn at least 20 hours of CPE. By close of the second year of the cycle, a CGFM must have earned at least 80 hours of CPE. The first CPE cycle starts on January 1 of the year following earning the CGFM. CGFMs maintain documentation of their CPE to support that they maintain the standard of competence by staying current.

Why should you achieve the distinction of being a Certified Government Financial Manager? If you desire to achieve the highest level in the profession of government financial management, you need the CGFM. If you wish to demonstrate your commitment and your competence to your employer and peers, you need the CGFM. If you want to set yourself apart, you need the CGFM. Make the commitment this year to achieve the CGFM. Please contact your Chapter's CGFM director, coordinator or committee chair if you want to be a CGFM holder.
